Short introduction to DWC and Oliver Kopsch

Oliver Kopsch is of German origin and has been in the field of solar desalination for many years. His original background is international marketing & communication for multinational companies in the finance sector. He started his "water career" as Managing Director of RSD GmbH, responsible for the global sales & marketing of the Rosendahl collector, a very effective solar distillation product.

Through this hands-on experience and through growing client demand for complete water solution packages rather than single product solutions he has left RSD and founded early 2006, along with other water experts in their respective fields of expertise, DWC.

DWC stands for "Decentralised and Renewable" based water consultancy and offers integrated, product independent solutions to solve any water related problem based on renewable energies and on a decentralised basis.
